

Scores of major & minor items grouped in to categories.

category	disability score
4	18 - 26
5	12 - 17
6	6 - 11
7	1 - 5
8	0.

I find it difficult to comprehend this method of categorisation although 4-8 seems quite straightforward. It will be difficult to make any meaningful comparison between the two measures of disability.

Whereas our disability score uses items which account for a variety of disabilities it seems that the Social Survey method repeats items which are affected by one disability. It does not cover a wide enough range of items basing the score on the basic self care activities (washing going to WC, getting to bed). A person who can do all these, but are unable to cook in safety, clean the house or go shopping without great difficulty would be classed as not disabled. This fits in with their idea that if people can use a wheel chair to get around they are not impaired only disabled. Their whole construction of a disability score is also far too complicated in many ways. One wonders how many methodological blunders can be hidden beneath this complicated procedure.

the importance of the economy and the number of people to be affected from such a tax.

18. 10. 1943

18. 10. 1943

18. 10. 1943

18. 10. 1943

and also provides for the use of the money collected by itself from the tax to help those who are suffering from the effects of inflation and to improve the standard of living of the people and to help the government to meet its financial difficulties.

At the present time there is a great deal of uncertainty about the future of the economy and the number of people to be affected by such a tax. The government has already taken steps to combat inflation and to improve the standard of living of the people and to help the government to meet its financial difficulties.
The government has also taken steps to combat inflation and to improve the standard of living of the people and to help the government to meet its financial difficulties. The government has also taken steps to combat inflation and to improve the standard of living of the people and to help the government to meet its financial difficulties.