

Health.

Each person was asked to describe their health. Did they think that it was good, fair, or poor for their age. How ^{do} ~~does~~ ^{their} ~~there~~ answers compare with disability score and age. Table 10 shows the percentage of men and women with six disability scores according to whether they felt their health was good, fair or poor for their age. Table 11 shows the percentage of men and women ^{of different age groups} according to whether they felt good, fair or poor health for age.

~~Both tables suggest that women are more pessimistic than men, with increasing disability a higher proportion of individuals feel that their health is poor for age.~~ ^{Not surprisingly}

Table 10 shows that for both men and women, not surprisingly, increasing disability means that a higher proportion of individuals feel that their health is poor for age. Noticeably men tend to opt for both extremes while women take the middle answer with increasing disability. If you look at the optimistic men, ^(those say their health is good) it would appear that men are more satisfied than women about their health. The opposite conclusion can be drawn if one looks at the pessimistic answers. More men than women feel that their health is poor.

Table 11 gives a slightly different picture. There very little difference between sexes in their answers. Generally men are slightly more satisfied than women except among the middle age groups (40-59). But not surprisingly the trend is similar in direction to Table 10. ^{A larger proportion of} Both ~~the~~ men and women feel that their health is poor for ^{their} age with increasing age.

12:00
The first part of the lecture was about the history of the world. It started with the beginning of time and went through the different eras. The speaker talked about the different civilizations that have existed and how they have changed over time. It was a very interesting and informative lecture. I learned a lot of new things about the world and its history. The speaker was very knowledgeable and did a great job of explaining everything. I enjoyed the lecture very much and would recommend it to anyone who is interested in history.

The second part of the lecture was about the different types of governments. The speaker talked about the different forms of government that have existed throughout history. He mentioned monarchies, republics, and democracies. He also talked about the different ways that governments are organized and how they make decisions. The speaker gave examples of different governments and how they have changed over time. It was a very interesting and informative lecture. I learned a lot of new things about different types of governments and how they work. The speaker was very knowledgeable and did a great job of explaining everything. I enjoyed the lecture very much and would recommend it to anyone who is interested in politics.

The third part of the lecture was about the different types of societies. The speaker talked about the different ways that people have organized themselves into societies. He mentioned hunter-gathering societies, agricultural societies, and industrial societies. He also talked about the different ways that societies have changed over time. The speaker gave examples of different societies and how they have changed over time. It was a very interesting and informative lecture. I learned a lot of new things about different types of societies and how they work. The speaker was very knowledgeable and did a great job of explaining everything. I enjoyed the lecture very much and would recommend it to anyone who is interested in sociology.